

Accept Credit Card Online

Contributed by Quincy Jenkensen
Tuesday, 20 June 2006
Last Updated Wednesday, 26 July 2006

If you have an online business or offer services for a fee, than you probably have a payment system in place. There are quite a few merchant services available to internet entrepreneurs to assist them in payment methods that accept credit cards online. If you don't already accept credit card online, you should consider it. Pay Pal is popular, but many people want to pay through Pay Pal and other internet payment processors with a credit card. If you want to reach as many customers as possible, you should accept a credit card online. But be sure learn how to back up files correctly so that if customers have questions you can present to them your previous transactions made or somewhat evidences to show. There are quite a few businesses that offer online merchant accounts for varying fees so that you can accept credit card online. You can check this out at your bank also. If you have an existing business account, or not, you can take advantage of they merchant services your bank has to offer. They are probably very comparable to those offered by online vendors, and services are competitively priced as well. When choosing how to accept credit cards online, you must first consider what type of credit cards you want to accept. Some merchant account vendors and online merchant account processors only offer certain types of credit cards, such as Visa and MasterCard only, or these two plus Discover, or these three plus American Express. Each vendor will have different fees and services associated with certain types of accounts, and you will have to do some shopping to find just what type of plan will fit your needs. It makes no sense to pay for services you don't really need. In order to accept credit card online, you must have a shopping cart or other type of online payment processing software in place. You can set it up through Papal or another type of online payment system, or you can use the software provided to you with whatever package you have chosen from an online merchant account vendor. This is probably your best bet to accept credit cards online. The software tracks purchases, sales, inventory, taxes, whether an item was shipped or not, and the status of the order among many other things. Obviously the more bells and whistles you choose, the more it will cost you on a monthly basis. The advantage is that your level of sales will offset the fees charged by the merchant account vendor helping you to accept credit card online and the credit card companies. If your business is not yet making much of a profit, you may not want to venture to accept credit cards online yet. If you have money to play with, by all means try it. It is more convenient for your customer and may make the difference between getting a sale or not.